Bomb Outrage Nearly Caught El Paso Man

The fall horror of the recent New York bomb outrage was experienced by Mrs. Hotchkiss, of the El Paso firm of Hotchkiss & Frost in the first National Bank building, who has just returned from a business trip to New York city.

With a friend, William M. Ballard, secretary of the Commercial Union Insurance company of New York, Mr. Hotchkiss was within a block of the scene of the outrage which occurred just one minute after noon. Had it not been for a meeting with a friend who detained them for ten or fifteen minutes, Mr. Hotchkiss and Mr. Ballard would have been on the spot of the accident as they were on their way to lunch and would have walked through Wall street to get to it.

"It sounded like a clap of thunder," said Mr. Hotchkiss. "A tremendous explosion followed with immediate reports that some building had collapsed and thousands of persons killed. I do not know the exact time of the explosion, but I was on the street when we were swept up by the moving throngs and carried down the one block."

"The street seemed strewn with the bodies of the dead. Sometimes there was only a limb or a part of the face. I saw dozens of hats torn in two or partly burned. The windows of buildings within a block and a half radius of the Morgan building were shattered and window weights by the thousand covered the street."

"At first, there was an hysteria of panic. The people seemed dazed and simply could not realize its horror. I myself seemed paralyzed, numb. I could not grasp the situation. I felt as though I were in a nightmare and was groping for understanding. The men around me were shouting and crying and I could not hear a word."

The status of Washington which stands in front of the treasury building was smashed through by the weight of debris and pieces of metal rained on all sides, according to Mr. Hotchkiss.

WHIPPING POST IS USED FOR HUNGARIAN OFFENDERS

Budapest, Hungary, Oct. 12.—The whipping post was instituted in Hungary by a bill just passed by the assembly. As originally introduced it was meant as a punishment for profane, vulgar and offensive against the food laws. As enacted, however, the feature is eliminated and it applies only to moral offenders against the army, the state and plots against property.

Must Dress and Feel A Part To Give It Right

To play a part correctly, one must feel it, and to feel it, one must "dress" it. This is the declaration of Miss Francesca Capellano, star in "My Little Rome," coming to the Crawford Saturday.

"I never play a part unless I am sure of my foundation and to be positive that it is firm and that I am on a sure footing. I direct myself of all my garments and begin arranging myself in the costume of the character."

FRANCESCA CAPELLANO As Tiger Rose

ter by first clothing my feet, as for instance, in "Tiger Rose," the first of all, I place on my extremities the white hose, then the low cut strapped undergarment, which I dress from underneath up, finishing with the bright red mesh and the beautiful deep red rose in my raven black hair," she said.

"Now I feel dressed. I am Rose. I am the part and no matter how many friends may visit me back of the scenes, while I converse with them, even an object of local interest, I do not forget that I am still Rose; talk to them as Rose, imbue what they say as Rose and then I am ready at my cue to step before my audience and not forget the conception of my character as Rose."

"I am not superstitious, but once or twice, when I have entered the theater a little late and found my costumes, leaving some of my street ap-

FORT BLISS CAR HIT BY MOTOR TRUCK

The greatest of good fortune accompanied a score of more passengers, most of them women, riding on street car No. 45, Fort Bliss line, at about noon Monday when an army truck filled with gravel crashed into its rear with such force as to force the front trucks clear of the rails, without even slight injury to anyone on board.

The accident occurred a few hundred yards beyond a tunnel through which the street car lines cross under the R. P. & A. W. tracks, a little more than half way to Fort Bliss from the business district.

The car, at which E. N. Soyars was motorman and C. M. Bata was conductor, followed to Fort Bliss, had drawn up to one of the stopping places to permit a woman to get on board. At that point, the truck is crossed by a road approaching the rails from the west at a right angle. A deep gully just west of the rails is spanned by a narrow wooden bridge.

According to report made to officials of the street railway company, the car had been drawn up so that its front trucks protruded just beyond the point where the bridge formed a connecting link in the road, which inclines sharply to the tracks. As passengers were alighting and others were preparing to board the street car, the truck suddenly made its appearance, moving down the incline toward the car at a considerable rate of speed. The conductor, seeing it apparently made desperate efforts to apply his brakes as his truck neared the street car, and the crash followed.

Fortunately, street railway officials say, the vehicle struck the heavy steel trucks of the street car, to which little damage was done. Had the truck crashed into the wooden side of the car a few feet further down, officials believe that fatalities or serious injuries to nearly all on board would have resulted.

As it was, fright to those on board, two shattered windows and injury to the army truck and brief derangement of street car schedules was the extent of the damage.

ANSWERS TO READERS.

D. H.—There is nothing that will destroy the color of the hair, without destroying the hair also. I realize it is a very trying period, when the hair is neither colorful nor silvery. It is trying, merely because it calls for very good grooming and, because it is a transition period. Nothing looks so dowdy as hair that is partially gray and hanging in waves all over the head, with patches of a whole fringe of it flying carelessly around the back of the neck. Pure white hair with a truly elderly face could stand a certain amount of careless grooming, but the half gray head that is neglected suggests a down-at-the-heels maid.

The woman who has such hair should look upon it as an asset, as her skin is changing its tints also and the whole transition should be made as interesting as that of her budding daughter. Whoever has raised a girl without finding her transition from childhood to womanhood a trying time, since there was a constant mingling of styles, colors and cuts of clothing, until she finally attained some stable plane in her development, is not a realist.

But, to return to the half gray hair, supposing the owner of it does appreciate the advantage she is obtaining, she should use the vibrator used in it so that it will make it attractive in itself, she will then practice with various ways of dressing it, so that the lines will be becoming to her face.

Such hair should be kept very soft and fluffy, not by forcing the wig, but by soft and fluffy, if any curling must be done. The hair at that age should be trained to be fluffy, by means of lifting it off the scalp by process of a comb, then raise each combful from the head and allow it to loosen, so that it concentrates through the hair.

After the hair is dressed, if there are any flying ends, use a hair net over the entire head, so it will catch up the stray hairs, that look so untidy over the back. This hair should not be put over the hair so tightly that it packs the hair and destroys its fluffiness. Rather use many tiny hair pins, to keep the hair from falling away, than to secure it firmly over the head by tightening it and packing the hair.

The final place to gather up the fluffiness of the net is at the lower part of the head at the back. This will be done after the stray hairs have been brushed up from the neck and confined securely into the net.

The shampoo is important during this turning period, as most shampoos will turn gray hair yellow. Only a pure white soap should be used. A safe shampoo is that made from alcohol well diluted with water—but this latter method is only necessary, if one has a doubt about the quality of the soap. The woman with this turning hair will also find colors becoming. In fact, that hair has never looked well in even in her early youth. So she should make a study of herself and revise her color combination as well as her style of hair dressing.

An inquiry addressed to Miss Forbes in the "Beauty Chats" column, asking for the answer to the question: "What is the best way to get rid of a bad hair style?" was answered in the "Beauty Chats" column.

You will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients at a small cost.
